

Jazz Salutes Valentine's Day

The idea that Valentine's Day is a day for lovers is thought to originate with English poet Geoffrey Chaucer's "Parliament of Fowls", a poem written in the late 14th century. It describes a group of birds which gather together in the early spring – on 'seynt valentyne's day' – to choose their mates for the year. It seems that the poem sparked a tradition. In 1477, Margery Brews, a Norfolk woman, wrote a letter to her cousin John Paston, calling him 'my right well beloved Valentine'. It is the earliest known letter of its kind.

It is difficult to date the poem, but one theory goes that Chaucer wrote it for King Richard II (1367–1400) during the negotiations over his marriage to Anne of Bohemia in 1380. Whether or not this was really the event that prompted Chaucer to write the poem, what is clear is that the poem is a humorous and at times philosophical exploration of the idea of love.

The plot is about the narrator who dreams that he passes through a beautiful landscape, through the dark temple of Venus to the bright sunlight. Dame Nature sees over a large flock of birds who are gathered to choose their mates. The birds have a parliamentary debate while three male eagles try to seduce a female bird. The debate is full of speeches and insults.

Don't like Valentine's Day? There's consolation in Chaucer's poem, too. It ends with the birds singing a song, having failed to choose their mates, and deciding to defer the decision until the next year.

Capturing the joyful essence of what it feels like to love and be loved, the best jazz songs are timeless expressions of the deepest emotions.

President's Improv

By Carla Hays

I'm writing this the week before Christmas. Depending upon when you read this, I hope that your holidays will be (were) filled with lots of love and laughter, family and friends! How is it possible that 2023 is upon us?

It's my pleasure to report that our first four concerts were fabulous and almost sold out. Our September concert, "A Time For Jazz", was generously paid for and sponsored by our board member and major contributor, Doug Glicken. All of the proceeds were given to the Central Florida Jazz Society. Doug not only paid the musicians, but he also paid the Blue Bamboo and he worked with Greg to put the entire program together. It was sensational! Cubop in October was new and exciting. Everyone enjoyed it immensely! In November, Michelle Mailhot put together a great concert that featured many of our scholarship contestants and winners, as well as her wonderful performance. Her beautiful voice is like no other! We presented another new group in December. The Zach Bartholomew Trio was exceptional! They performed the "Charlie Brown Christmas" music. They are exciting, young musicians and the music itself was lots of fun and very nostalgic. See some concert photos further in this issue. The balance of our season, January through May, will be equally as enjoyable! We will present several new groups and several of your old favorites including The UCF Flying Horse Big Band.

Please attend the remaining concerts and bring your friends with you. People who have never been to one of our concerts are missing the sensational experience of our extremely talented musicians and of our fabulous venue, Blue Bamboo.

As always, we welcome your input and ideas. This is your Central Florida Jazz Society.

Wishing you all a happy, healthy, and prosperous New Year! God bless you, and I look forward to seeing you soon!

Cheers, Carla

SAMARA JOY

Linger Awhile

A review of the vocalist's second album

Every so often a new vocalist blows everyone on the jazz scene away with their distinctive style, charm, and dexterity. Samara Joy is that new voice that's giving new purpose to the music. Last year, the 22-year-old put out her self-titled album debut; since graduating from college, she has also performed in Switzerland and Paris. (Her live performances are just as breathtaking as experiencing her on wax. For many musicians that's not so easy, but she does it effortlessly.)

Touring internationally has sharpened her skills. There's plenty of evidence of that musical maturation on her new recording Linger Awhile, a nostalgic stroll through well-known and obscure standards. One trait she carries on from her last album is the mixing of swing and sweet tunes. The romantic feel she infuses into songs would make any loving couple want to hold each other while listening to her sing.

Joy gracefully takes listeners through the sassy "Sweet Pumpkin," featuring guitarist Pasquale Grasso, whose handy work on the strings is also prominently featured on the album. On "Guess Who I Saw Today," she draws listeners in with her knack for convincingly telling a love story through song.

She also takes on the longstanding vocalese tradition on "Nostalgia (The Day I Knew)" and "I'm Confessin'," which combines her lyrics with Lester Young's 1952 solo. (It's worth noting here that her songwriting acumen is equally arresting as her singing.)

Joy's primary aim in making this beauty was to further perfect her poetic vocals on songs that have deepened with time. There is much to be admired on Linger Awhile.

The Brendan Lanighan Octet

is an electrifying ensemble that consists of some of WNY and NYC's finest young talent in the jazz world. Since the group's inception in 2018, trombonist, composer and educator Brendan Lanighan, a Buffalo native and graduate of the Juilliard School, has dedicated himself to creating a performance experience that takes listeners on a journey that can be enjoyed by a wide range of music lovers.

Jeff Rupert navigates the band in and out of glorious textures and incredible song craft that would make anyone a fan, if for some reason you weren't already. This particular big band jazz ensemble is a juggernaut from the highly regarded UCF jazz studies program. The Flying Horse Big Band's energy is contagious, making them a whole lot of fun to listen to. Their smooth, big, exciting blast of sound is a sonic treat that will give you goosebumps every few minutes.

This is your chance to tell the band what you want to hear. Your tax-deductible donation of $100 per song goes into the CFJS Scholarship Fund to help future jazz stars with their educational pursuits. It's sure to be a fun afternoon even if you don't make a song request.
